Exterior Films, Part 2

Exterior films continue to grow in North America, and this formed the content for part 1 of our series on these advanced films. Everyone knows also that exterior film won't last as long as interior-installed window films – for the obvious reason that films are exposed to UV, wind, water and pollutants on the exterior of a building. Download part 2 of our 3 part series to understand these factors in more detail, and become knowledgeable about these products. It could be the difference between walking away from a project that cannot use interior film, and having a solution in hand for a great price! In our next issue, part 3 will describe Hanita Coatings' new XtraZone line of exterior films in detail, don't miss it!

Introducing Sigma

Hanita Coatings has worked long and hard to develop the latest technology for the auto tint world – meet Sigma! Sigma film is non-metal, lifetime warranty film, with the best shrinking layers we have ever produced. We know you will love the film, how it looks on the vehicle, how it installs, and the price. Some of our key customers have been using it for a while now, and their feedback has been great.

Sigma is available in a wide range of VLT's: 50, 36, 28, 20, 14 and 5. And of course, Sigma contains one of our most popular features – a metered liner that lets you know just how much film is left on the roll as you use it. This nano-particle film provides an awesome amount of heat rejection, so even customers with comparatively light tint will see a noticeable improvement in the comfort of their car.
